

FOR TIMES WOMEN WHO WANT TO KNOW

What Is Seen in The Shops

This column is not an advertising column, but is conducted by The Shopper to aid The Times' women readers who are interested in what the shops offer. Every item mentioned has been personally inspected by The Shopper and bargains pointed out are based on a carefully considered opinion of values. Information as to the identity of the stores referred to may be had by calling Main 5260 and asking for The Shopper.

BY THE SHOPPER.

That cerise is to be the leading color for fall and winter is pretty certain, for all of the stores are showing this brilliant shade not only in hats and their trimmings, but entire dresses made of this showy hue. One store in the center of the shopping district has an entire window trimmed in cerise, hats, gowns, and other dress accessories, and this rich shade being artistically displayed against a gleaming white background. One hat is of black velvet, with a saucy cerise satin cockade adorning one side of it. With this there is shown a satin and tulle dress of the same proportions. The center of the muff is formed of quilted satin, and the ends are in the middle there is a tulle band, with glancing yellow eyes. There is a pointed lining of cerise satin, which is disclosed when the muff falls open. This sumptuous dress accessory is priced $20.

I saw a set of golden beaver furs, consisting of a long, flat stole and a generous-sized muff, both elegantly lined with brown broad satin. In the window of a woman's outfitting store near the corner of Twelfth and F streets, the price for the set was $40. In the same window there were some handsome ostrich quills, with extraordinary long fibers, which were marked $5. One of these quills would be sufficient trimming for a hat.

Ten cents a package is not an exceptional bargain for envelopes unless they happen to be of extra quality. A stationery store near Eleventh and F streets is showing some extra fine quality lawn and organdie envelopes at this price.

For the mother who has a brand new wee bit of a baby in the home, a dainty pale pink or blue-bound baby book for the valuable records of the baby's life would be indispensable to this same young mother. The book is very brightly illustrated and full of bright and clever lines. The first page gives the date of birth and place. Then the following pages are devoted to the color of the baby's hair and eyes, the first tooth, the first step, the first dress, the first word, and a record of all the unusual and amusing happenings in the baby's early career. This book was marked $1.20 in a department store on F street, near Eleventh.

In the same book department I saw some very attractive holiday books bound in beautiful suede leather, dark brown and navy blue in color, which would make very appropriate birthday gifts. All the popular poets were represented in this bookshelf, and the prices were also very attractive.

I saw some popular desk sets in a stationery store on F street, near Twelfth street, this afternoon. There was a set of seven pieces made of etched brass, with a design of a five-petaled flower, which was very graceful and pretty. The price of this set was $10.50. There was also a set of German silver etched in the same pattern and the same price.

I saw a very moderate priced piece of mahogany furniture this afternoon in a store on Twelfth street near F street, which was well worth having. It was a little palm pedestal with a round top and was marked $15.00. In the same window I saw a solid mahogany bookrack inlaid with the figure of an owl on either end, which could be bought for $4.50. This would add to the attractiveness of a library or a man's den.

For the lover of flowers I saw a basket of Killarney roses, mixed in with the red purple asters, which one sees along the country roads this fall, in a city flower store window this afternoon for the reasonable price of $1.50. In this same store which was on F street near Thirteenth, I saw other baskets filled with Golden Gate roses and wild asters. These bright pink roses and purple wild flowers were most tempting to the person who has a passion for flowers.

I saw a dainty little poke bonnet made of purple velvet and trimmed across the front with fine cobweb-like touches of violet silk. With little orange colored Jerusalem cherries. The hat was very smart and would be appropriate for an evening wear. The price was remarkably cheap, $1.50.

In a little shop on F street, near Fourteenth, there is a dainty net waist, made in the popular peasant style, and trimmed with touches of violet silk. It is a fashionable side ruff, extending from neck to belt, has several rows of violet stitching, and there are some tiny violet flowers and leaves scattered throughout the garment. The price was only $2.50.

Every school and college girl and boy will be interested in the special sale of college posters that is being held in a book store on F street, near Eleventh. All of the local schools are represented in colors, with pretty girls as subjects. The price for these posters, which are quite large, is 3 cents each.

I saw a pair of hammered andirons in a hardware dealer's store not far from G and Twelfth streets this morning. They were marked $5.50. In the same store there is a solid brass fire rest, consisting of poker, shovel, and tongs, in a brass holder. The price is remarkably cheap, only $8.50.

FOR LITTLE FOLK JUST BEFORE BEDTIME

The Sandman's Stories

GLADIO—(Continued).

WHEN the four sisters saw the giant they all called out at once: "What is the matter?" for they were afraid he had come to return Gladio and take their new home from them.

"Your little sister is home," said the giant, "and she wishes to come back to you. She has cried all night and will not eat. What shall I do?" he asked.

"If I bring her back you will have to give up your home and be poor again," "No, no," said all four sisters at once: "keep her, she is a silly child, and if she does not stop crying shut her in a dark room and feed her on bread and water."

Then they hurried the giant away for fear their father would see him and hear his story.

"The giant has been here," they told Otto when he came in the house, "and Gladio is quite well and happy. She has everything she wants."

The next day while Otto was out the giant called again.

"What is the matter?" called all four sisters, for this time they were sure the giant had Gladio in one of his big pockets.

"Something terrible has happened, your sister has fallen into the power of an old witch," said the giant, "and she will be changed into a black cat unless you take her back at once, and she is crying for her sisters and her father; shall I bring her back?"

"No, no," replied all the sisters at once, "keep her and let the witch change her into a cat; that will be the end of her and you will not be bothered with her crying and we will not have her home. Hurry away!" they said, "before our father sees you."

Now, the truth of the matter was that Gladio was very happy in her new home, but the giant wished to test the hard-hearted sisters.

They watched him out of sight, but they did not know that he returned by another road to look for Otto, and when he saw him he called very softly "Otto! Otto!"

When Otto heard his name he looked around and when he saw the giant he hurried to him, asking eagerly, "Where is Gladio? Is she well?"

"No," said the giant, "she is crying for you and wants to come home, but you need not take her back if you do not want her, for an old witch will change her into a black cat and she will be crying for her sisters and her father; shall I bring her back?"

"No, no," replied all the sisters at once, "keep her and let the witch change her into a cat; that will be the end of her and you will not be bothered with her crying and we will not have her home. Hurry away!" they said, "before our father sees you."

not want her, for an old witch will change her into a black cat and she will be crying for her sisters and her father; shall I bring her back?"

"No, no," cried Otto, "where is my poor little girl, do not let the witch harm her; take me to her."

"I cannot do that," said the giant, "but if you really want Gladio I will bring her back, but remember, if I do this you will lose your nice, comfortable home and go back to your poor house, where I first found you."

"I do not care," replied Otto, "only bring back Gladio and I will never again complain."

"It will bring her tonight," said the giant as he hurried away.

That night when the moon was shining and Otto and the four sisters sat around a bright fire sleigh bells were heard.

The sisters ran to the window and looked out.

A beautiful white sleigh drawn by four white horses wearing silver harnesses and silver bells came dashing down the road and stopped in front of the door.

There were two people in the sleigh besides the driver: one was a lady dressed in beautiful white furs and the other was a gentleman in a dark fur coat and cap. The gentleman jumped out and helped the lady, who sprang to the ground and ran to her sisters.

The four sisters ran to open the door, for they thought some royal persons had come to visit them, but when they opened the door there stood their father, Gladio, and beside her a handsome young man.

Otto ran to Gladio and took her in his arms. "You shall stay here," he said, "and never leave your old father again; but who is this gentleman?" he asked.

"This is my husband," said Gladio, smiling. "I have brought you a son."

The sisters did not understand it, but they felt sure that it would be to their advantage to welcome Gladio, and so they gathered around her and kissed her, looking at her rich furs with jealous eyes.

"Have you come to stay?" they asked, fearing they would lose their comfortable home.

When Gladio's husband heard the question, he left Otto and went to the sisters and said, "No, your sister will not deprive you of your home; she has come to carry her father but that of them in the palace where she will live with me."

Then he told them that he was a prince, and that he was looking for a wife, when he came to the forest of a cruel giant. A witch had helped him to disguise himself, so that he might find a good wife among the poor.

Then he told Otto that he had visited the sisters and told them how unhappy Gladio was, that he might test their love for their sister, but that all of them had been willing that she should be changed into a black cat, that they might live in comfort.

"You shall not lose your home," he told the selfish sisters, "but Gladio and I will take your father with us, for he loved to carry her father back, even if he lost his comfortable home."

"You do not deserve a good sister, such as Gladio, and you will never see her again."

Otto rode away in the white sleigh with Gladio and her prince, and the four sisters looked after them, repenting of their greediness and hard-heartedness when it was too late.

Tomorrow's Story: "Bebe."

For Stubbish Jelly.

When your jelly will not jell, and that happens to every cook at times, do not turn it back into a saucepan to cook it over; that breaks the little gelatinous globules that have formed even though not enough to make jelly, and you will have at best a sticky, stringy mess; but take a large dripping pan, half fill it with water, set your undisturbed glasses of jell in it, not close enough to touch, put into a hot oven, and let them bake till sufficiently jelled. It sometimes takes three-quarters of an hour, but the jelly will cut as smooth and clean as though stiff enough at a first cooking.

Erysipelas Cure.

A trained nurse tells of a curious home remedy for erysipelas that effected a cure.

Ripe cranberries were pounded to a paste and applied over the afflicted parts. They were bound with thin muslin and kept on until they dried, when a new portion was applied until the inflammation was drawn out.

Cranberries reduce inflammation; they are almost as if cooked from the absorbed heat, but they do not act as would a poultice.

Grape Pie Recipe.

Make a rich pie crust the same as you do in making any other pie. Wash the grapes and remove skins. Then fill the pie with the skins and sprinkle two pounds of flour and one and one-half cupsful of sugar over the skins. Put on top crust and bake. The remaining part of the grapes may be used for jelly. Concord grapes will be used.

Saving The Wall.

To save a wall from discoloration by a picture, drive a brass-headed tack a little way into each corner of the back of the frame, so that the picture will stand out slightly. This permits a free current of air, and so prevents damage to the wall.

Drinking Water Test.

Fill a pint bottle three-fourths full of water. Dissolve half a teaspoonful of granulated sugar in the water and cork the bottle. Set it in a warm place for two days, and, if at the end of that time it becomes cloudy it is unfit for use. If it remains clear it is safe.
